Q: Run Python script on remote server with custom arguments I have a Python 3.4 script that's running on a remote server. I would like to be able to specify a list of arguments to this script when I'm running the script on the remote server. I was thinking that I could do this by ssh'ing to the remote server and running a shell script. Something like this: `ssh server1 \ -t /path/to/myscript.py myarg1 myarg2` Does this sound like a good approach? What are the caveats? A: Yes this is the correct approach. If you don't have ssh running, you can use paramiko to execute a shell command remotely. You can have your script accept parameters: `import argparse parser = argparse.ArgumentParser() parser.add_argument('-arg1', dest='arg1', help='arg1') parser.add_argument('-arg2', dest='arg2', help='arg2') args = parser.parse_args()` Now you can start it like so: `$ ssh SERVER.DOMAIN.COM -t /path/to/myscript.py -arg1 arg1 -arg2 arg2` If you've started a shell on the remote system before, you can specify the `-t` and `-c` options to the ssh call to mimic an interactive shell. TORONTO William Nylander will be a No. 2 centre behind Sidney Crosby. Connor McDavid will be a No. 1 forward on the power play, as voted on by teammates. No matter what you choose, there's one thing to be said for the 2018 NHL All-Star Game. You get to play one more game than in the past and, as such, you're guaranteed to get at least one more opportunity to make your case for the league's player of the year title. So, you have your time to make it happen. Even if the game, on Jan. 26, is meaningless in the context of the season, it's an honour to be invited to skate in the PyeongChang Games and that time in the spotlight isn't wasted. Your All-Star experience isn't a backup gig. It'
